Toronto Mayor David Miller has taken his message on the now two-day-old civic strike onto Twitter.

Just after 8 a.m. today the mayor updated his Twitter page, twitter.com/mayormiller. It's the first time the avid tweeter has updated the page since the strike began early Monday.

Miller tweeted that city management is still bargaining and is "prepared to be fair."

But Miller stressed the agreement needs to be affordable and "allows City to run efficiently (sic), effectively."

Miller's tweet received some quick tweets back from twittering Torontonians.

One man wrote that "fair" equaled taxpayers not having to foot the bill for "18 ridiculous bankable sick days."

He encouraged Miller to dig in his heels.
